

Macquarie Sports 2016 Annual Review

MACQUARIE GROUP FOUNDATION

Access to free sporting events, as well as high profile sporting role models, often isn't a possibility for many children around Australia, particularly for those in remote or marginalised communities.

Macquarie Sports aims to break down the barriers for participation in sport by delivering sporting clinics, providing sporting equipment and access to high profile sports people, all at no cost to participants. Since 1999, over 100,000 children from communities around Australia have been provided with this opportunity.

Macquarie Sports also offers corporate scholarships to elite young sports people, who share both sporting and corporate career goals.

Introduction

We are pleased to present the Macquarie Sports 2016 Annual Review

Research shows that children from disadvantaged communities are less likely to engage in organised sport, due to the costs involved and lack of opportunities within their communities*. Sport plays a significant role in the social, physical and cognitive development of children. It also has a broader social benefit, with the ability to break down common societal barriers, creating united and cohesive communities. Macquarie Sports recognises the need to provide children with access to free sporting opportunities. We believe that every child should have access to sport, regardless of location and circumstance.

Sporting role models can have a profound ability to inspire and motivate children. Our Macquarie Sports ambassadors work to impart important educational messages around healthy eating, fitness and team work, leaving a lasting impression upon the children.

All of our work reflects Macquarie's view that companies have a role to play in developing healthy communities.

Macquarie Sports' key objectives are to:

- benefit children across communities through the delivery of high quality sporting clinics
- partner with grassroots sporting organisations to enhance their capacity
- convey Macquarie's commitment to the local communities in which it operates.

In addition to our sporting clinics, Macquarie Sports also offers a scholarships program to elite young athletes who aspire to a corporate career as well as their sporting careers. The scholarships provide paid work experience across the various Macquarie business groups, access to a variety of networks and resources within Macquarie and ongoing casual employment opportunities within the Macquarie Sports program.

In 2016, Macquarie Sports held 25 community events around Australia, across nine sports, reaching 5,219 children. Clinics were run in New South Wales, Queensland, Victoria, South Australia and the Northern Territory.

Cricket

Cricket's popularity in regional towns was evident with large attendances at clinics throughout New South Wales

Macquarie Sports continued to work in partnership with Cricket NSW, delivering three cricket clinics in regional New South Wales, reaching 720 primary school-aged children in Coffs Harbour, Albury and Yass.

Sydney Sixers and Sydney Thunder players, including Doug Bollinger, Patrick Cummins, Sean Abbott and Chris Green, conducted the clinics alongside Cricket NSW coaching staff. Following the clinics, each child was presented with a backyard cricket set.

On 28 November, Macquarie Sports hosted its annual Cricket Leadership day at the Sydney Cricket Ground. Clubs and schools throughout NSW and the ACT were invited to register four players who had exhibited leadership qualities within their school First XI or Green Shield cricket teams.

Over 100 players took part in the clinic, which included intensive coaching from former Australian players Matthew Hayden, Michael Bevan, Michael Kasprovicz and Andy Bichel. Media professional Andrew Coorey also conducted media and public speaking seminars for the cricketers throughout the day.

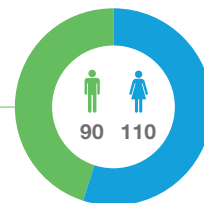

"I have really enjoyed my long association with the Macquarie Sports program and along with cricket, the opportunity to authentically engage and share my personal leadership lessons with the next generation of cricketers."

Hockey

Taking a two-time Olympian to children in country towns effectively promoted the importance of participation and healthy living

- * 1 Hockeyroo Emily Smith and a primary school group in Narromine enjoy themselves following the clinic
- 2 New hockey equipment on display at the Cowra clinic

We've been extremely lucky to partner with Macquarie Sports. Thanks to its support, we've been able to bring Hockeyroo and Rio Olympian Emily Smith to regional communities, introducing young boys and girls to our sport in a unique and exciting way, as well as providing them with all the gear necessary to begin their hockey careers. We wouldn't be able to do this without Macquarie Sports and we're very grateful to be able to provide these great opportunities to communities that might not normally get the chance.

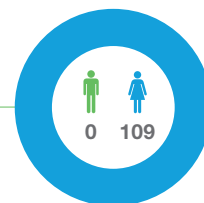

David Thompson
CEO, Hockey NSW

In November, Macquarie Sports and Hockey NSW joined forces to deliver hockey programs in regional New South Wales, visiting the towns of Narromine and Cowra.

The clinics included an introductory skills session for local primary school groups, before playing small sided modified games. The clinics were attended by 200 children across both towns. Each child was presented with a hockey set, including hockey stick, ball and cap to further develop their skills following the clinic.

Emily Smith, a member of the Hockeyroos and Australian representative at both the London and Rio Olympics attended the clinics. Emily was able to impart many important skills to the attendees, as well as passing on her own success story, including her progression from junior hockey in her home town of Crookwell, to national representation at the Olympics and world championships.

Hydrothon

Elite female surf sports athletes mentored over 100 young female athletes at the Hydrothon NextGen All-Female Clinic

Macquarie Sports partnered with Hydrothon to deliver a NextGen All Female Surf Sports Clinic at Sydney's Wanda Beach in September. One hundred and nine teenage female athletes attended the clinic, with some travelling from as far as Yeppoon in Queensland and Mordialloc in Victoria to take part. Hosting the clinic were professional Iron Women Liz Pluimers, Harriet Brown, Hannah Minogue and Lizzie Welborn.

The clinic included an educational seminar featuring topics such as nutrition, high performance, social media and body image. Following the seminar, the participants moved to the beach to receive board paddling, swimming and running tuition from the coaches. Every participant was provided with a gift pack, including a Hydrothon racing top, t-shirt and cap.

Without the support of Macquarie Sports, the first ever Hydrothon NextGen female surf sports clinic would not have been possible. The half day clinic was attended by 109 girls aged 11-15 who were mentored by five of Australia's best Surf Iron Women across nutrition, goals setting, body image and race techniques. Macquarie Sports always made themselves available to help us deliver a unique clinic that inspired young girls to maintain and healthy body, mind and friendships.

National Primary Games

Macquarie Sports is pleased to be able to provide support for such a worthwhile community, grassroots sporting event

Macquarie Sports continued its support of the National Primary Games in 2016. The two-day multi sports carnival attracted close to 2,000 children from sporting clubs and schools up and down the eastern seaboard, competing across 12 different sports.

Australian Olympians from the 2008 Beijing Olympics women's kayak team, Lyndsie Fogarty, Chantal Minchin and Hannah Davis, attended the games and travelled throughout the 12 various venues to offer support and motivation to the young athletes.

Macquarie Sports' support is used to significantly reduce the entry costs for participants, allowing more children to be able to participate. Macquarie Sports will continue its support of the National Primary Games in 2017, with an even larger attendance expected.

Netball

Current and former Australian Diamonds players delivered netball clinics in communities around Sydney

Macquarie Sports delivered three sell-out community netball clinics in 2016, reaching 750 primary school children in Campbelltown, Sutherland and Penrith. The three hour clinics are aimed at promoting skill development and match play. Current and former Australian Diamonds representatives, including Liz Ellis, Catherine Cox, Paige Hadley and Caitlyn Thwaites led the clinics, before hosting a Q & A session with the participants. To conclude the day, every child was provided with a netball, visor and signatures from the coaches.

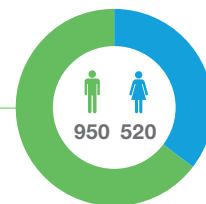

- 1 Penrith participants gather for a picture with Paige Hadley and Caitlyn Thwaites post clinic
- 2 Excitement builds ahead of the Sutherland clinic
- 3 Catherine Cox runs a ball skills session at the Sutherland clinic

The Macquarie Sports Netball Clinics have such a friendly and inviting nature about them, I love being able to coach the next generation of kids all over Sydney, especially in my chosen sport of netball. Seeing school kids, both boys and girls, become actively involved is a pleasure and provides benefits to all children in the form of learning new skills, the importance of teamwork, meeting new people and of course living an active lifestyle.

Rugby League

Over 1,470 children in communities around Australia attended clinics delivered by former NRL stars Nathan Hindmarsh and Steve Menzies

Macquarie Sports continued to work in partnership with the National Rugby League, delivering rugby league clinics around Australia in 2016.

Macquarie Sports Ambassadors Nathan Hindmarsh and Steve Menzies appeared at the clinics, attended by 1,470 children. Clinics were conducted in Alice Springs in NT, Bourke in NSW, Mount Barker in SA, Toowoomba in QLD and Hoppers Crossing in VIC.

NRL development staff put the participants through skills rotations, including an educational healthy living tutorial before running non-contact league-tag games. To conclude the clinic, the children were provided with a healthy lunch, football, gift pack and signatures and photos with the coaches.

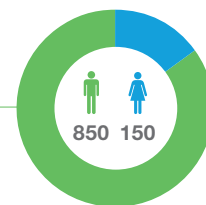

Growing up in a rural town, I had limited access to my sporting heroes. Having had a career playing professional sport, Macquarie Sports gives me the opportunity to give back to the sport through these clinics, and that's why I am proud to be a Macquarie Sports ambassador.

Rugby Union

Children from regional NSW and metropolitan Sydney enjoyed the chance to train alongside members of the NSW Waratahs

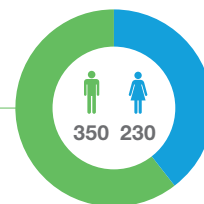

- * 1 Waratahs player Tatafu Polota-Nau at the Community Rugby clinic
- 2 Waratahs and Wallabies forward Will Skelton signs footballs at the Community Rugby clinic
- 3 Junior rugby players from western Sydney along with Waratahs players and staff at the Rooty Hill clinic
- 4 Over 650 junior rugby players commence their warm up

Macquarie Sports delivered three community rugby union clinics in 2016, in partnership with the NSW Waratahs. Over 1,000 children attended the clinics throughout New South Wales, with over 650 attending the annual Macquarie Sports Community Rugby Super Clinic in Hunters Hill during May, attracting junior rugby players from throughout NSW and the ACT. Community clinics were also held in Maitland and Rooty Hill.

Most of the Waratahs squad appeared at the various events throughout the year, including some of their most experienced players such as Bernard Foley, Michael Hooper, Kurtley Beale, Robb Horne, Paddy Ryan, Will Skelton and Nick Phipps. Every participant left the clinics with a football and kicking tee, along with signatures and pictures with the players.

Soccer

Clinics in western Sydney were delivered by Matilda and W-League player Servet Uzunlar

“Whether providing kids with an opportunity to learn more about the game or simply getting them engaged in a great team sport, I have thoroughly enjoyed being part of the clinics.”

Macquarie Sports and Football NSW conducted two clinics in western Sydney in 2016. Over 530 primary school children in Plumpton and Colyton attended the skills sessions hosted by current Sydney FC W-League player Renee Rollason and current Sydney FC W-League and former Matilda representative, Servet Uzunlar.

The clinics focused on promoting participation within the sport, as well as improving skills and playing small sided games. Every child attending the clinics was given a football to take home.

Surfing

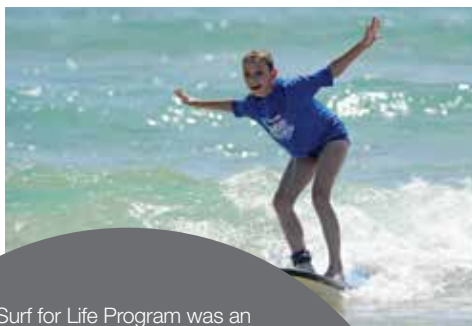

Surfing is a new sport in the Macquarie Sports program. It proved to be very popular with kids from community program Aunties and Uncles

In April, Macquarie Sports teamed up with Surfing Australia to deliver an introductory surfing clinic at Greenmount Beach in Queensland, attended by children from the Aunties and Uncles program on the Gold Coast.

The children and their mentors were put through a learn-to-surf program under the guidance of Surfing Australia staff, before taking to the surf with former Macquarie Sports scholarship recipient and World Surf League representative, Codie Klein. Following several hours in the water, the children were provided with lunch and giveaway packs, including a rash vest, towel, cap and surfing accessories.

The surfing program will expand to four locations around Australia in 2017, inviting children from local charities and community groups.

“The Surf for Life Program was an opportunity to give underprivileged kids the chance to try a sport that is not always accessible to everyone. I loved seeing the smiles on their faces as they had the chance to connect with ocean and nature through surfing, something I am so passionate about but take for granted every single day. Having Macquarie on board gave these kids the opportunity to experience surfing for the first time, giving them access to the resources and expertise needed to give it a go and for those couple of hours when you are enjoying the ocean or riding a wave nothing else matters. You could see the joy that the experience brought to the kids.”

Tiwi College

The Macquarie Sports team is proud to continue its seven year association with the Tiwi College on Melville Island

For the seventh consecutive year, Macquarie Sports travelled to Tiwi College, situated on Melville Island north of Darwin, to provide sporting activities within the school.

This year's activities included a multisport clinic, including cricket, Australian rules football, touch football, soccer and basketball. Students from the Tiwi College rotated through the various sports throughout the morning, before competing in a round robin basketball competition.

Coaches on hand during the clinic included former Australian cricketer Matthew Hayden, National Basketball League veteran Brett

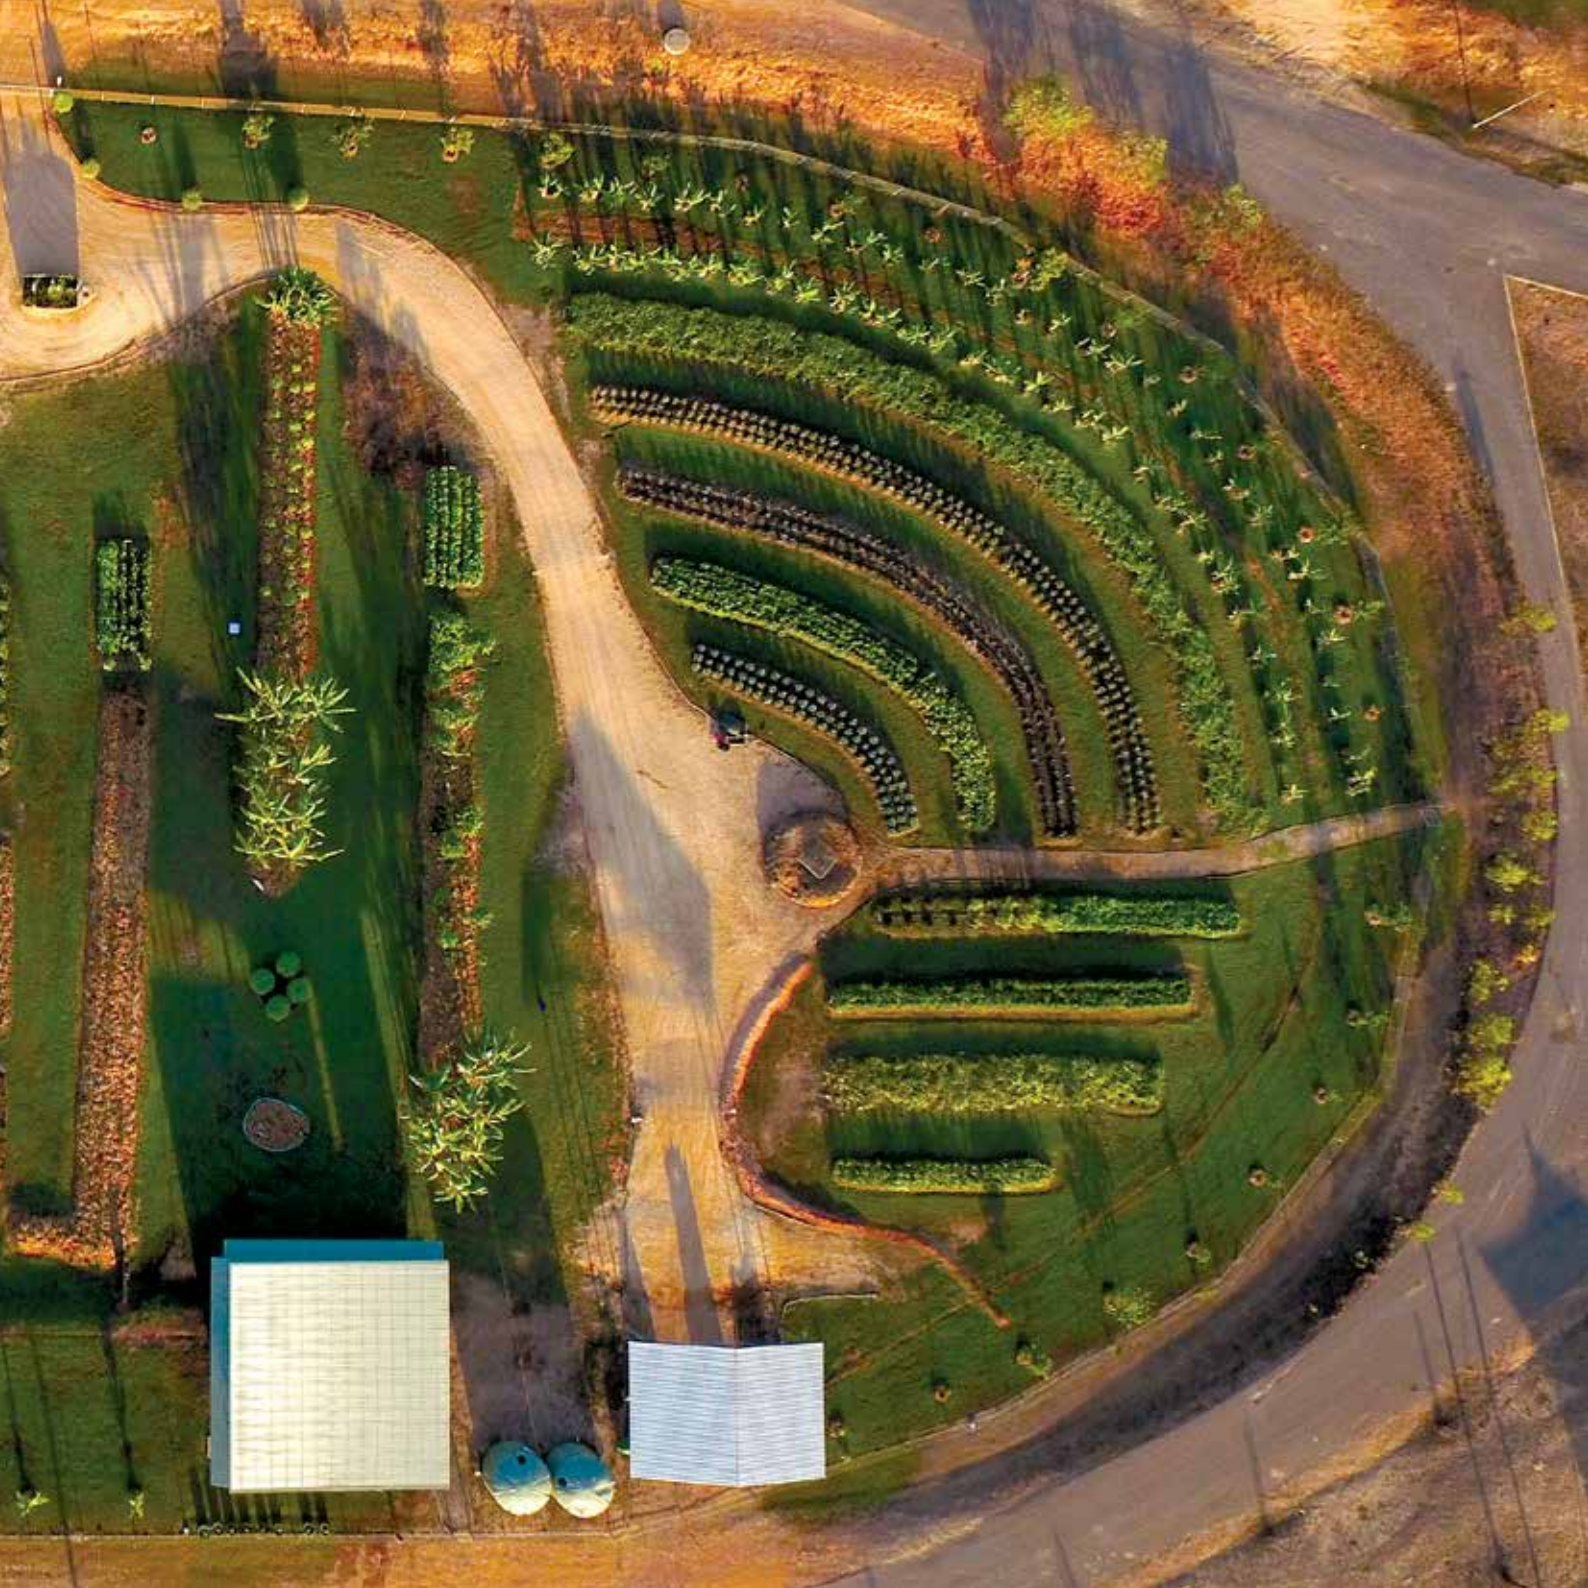

Wheeler, NSW Waratahs player Damien Fitzpatrick and former Matilda Servet Uzunlar.

The Tiwi sports activities are a part of Macquarie's broader support of the Tiwi College, including Macquarie staff fundraising, volunteering and donations. This support has helped establish an agricultural enrichment program at the college, aiming to provide the students with agricultural, farming and hospitality skills. In addition, graduate trainee positions have created employee opportunities for the students.

Water Polo

Children in regional NSW were provided with clinics hosted by current Olympians Lea Yanitsas and Richie Campbell

- * 1 Participants and three time Olympian Richie Campbell following the clinic in Dubbo
- 2 Bathurst participants having their new water polo balls signed
- 3 A mid-clinic group photo in Bathurst

Macquarie Sports and Water Polo NSW partnered to deliver two water polo clinics in regional New South Wales in 2016.

Held in conjunction with the NSW State Championships, the clinics offered participants the chance to learn new skills, under the guidance of Water Polo NSW coaching staff. The clinics in Dubbo and Bathurst were attended by 200 children, who had the chance to mix with Australian water polo Olympians Richie Campbell and Lea Yanitsas. Each participant was provided with a gift pack including a water polo ball following the clinic.

The scholarship has given me the opportunity to meet some really amazing people within the organisation and have the chance to be hands on with a variety of projects. This one month placement at Macquarie has taught me more than I could have imagined. It's shown me what it has been like to work with a team in a non-sporting environment and how together you achieve a common goal. I've learnt about the range of processes necessary to complete particular projects via hands on application. This has also helped me find my true passion for marketing. I feel so privileged to have worked with the marketing team and operational risk team.
